

Tanzania Program Summary

Tanzania's program focused on controlling public corruption. The program includes projects to build the non-governmental sector's monitoring capacity, strengthen the rule of law for good governance, establish a Financial Intelligence Unit and curb corruption in public procurement.

Program Highlights

- ★ Tanzania's MCC Threshold Program ended on December 30, 2008.
- ★ The program trained more than 300 journalists in investigative reporting, and observers have reported a better quality of stories and an increased willingness by journalists to report on controversial subjects like high-level government corruption.
- ★ The Prevention and Combatting Corruption Bureau (PCCB), with assistance from Tanzania's MCC Threshold Program, was assisted by the New York City Department of Investigations in five grand corruption cases. The PCCB also sent 27 new lower-level cases to be prosecuted in the last quarter, obtaining 14 convictions.
- ★ The Threshold Program supported Financial Intelligence Unit, which tracks suspicious and potentially fraudulent financial transactions, was equipped with furniture and information technology hardware and software.
- ★ The Tanzania's MCC Threshold Program trained 80 magistrates on combating corruption and financial crimes, such as money-laundering. An additional 20 magistrates were trained in adult education and now serve as master trainers for their respective regions.
